COLONY IS PLANNED FOR SUGAR ISLAND

An exclusive millionaire's colony to consist of thirty estates of 100 or more acres each, no camp or home to cost less than $50,000 is planned for Sugar Island in Moosehead Lake. This is the most important single recreational project ever undertaken in this country. Sugar Island, which has 5400 acres of woodland, has been secured by a Boston firm which proposes to develop it into a sportsman's paradise for wealthy owners who can afford seclusion. Access from the mainland will be by a bridge 1,000 feet long, affording a private right of way. A board of governors will determine all matters of local policy and pass on the eligibility of prospective purchasers of land. Each estate will have its own lighting, water, sewage system and landscape engineers already are at work planning physical improvements, including twelve miles of inland roadways. It is expected the program will be completed within two years. In every direction from the island stretches an almost unbroken wilderness, affording unrivaled opportunities for hunting, while Moosehead Lake is famed for its landlocked salmon, trout and coho. Airplane transportation will supplement rail and motor travel. The camps will be log cabins or Swiss chalets, and when constructed independent of the company's architect. The aim of the project is to form an exclusive community whose members will be in the solitude of the Maine woods and enjoy the sports they afford.

To aid unemployment during the winter months in Camden, Mrs. Edward W. Bok has provided funds to complete improvements in the Camden Opera House and work has already started. The building will be redecorated, new lighting fixtures installed and the stairs and front entrance are to be remodeled. When completed, the structure will seat 1,000 people and will be practically fireproof.

The formal dedication of the Cadillac Mountain highway, Acadia National Park, has been set for July 4, 1932. This road, almost four miles long and situated on Mt. Desert Island and reaching the top of Cadillac Mountain, 1532 feet high, the highest mountain on the Atlantic seaboard of the extraordinary stretch of America, is an extraordinary feat of engineering. Completion of the road is the result of a step to open the entire beautified Acadia National Park to the public, the park being the only national playground lying east of the Mississippi in the park system of the United States department of the interior. Bar Harbor lies close to the entrance of the park.

"In all my world travels, which have been varied and of long duration, I have never found a spot which appeals to me as much as does Maine," asserts Henry Lawrence Doyle, artist and inventor. Doyle, who was born in Ohio, came to Maine, also an attractive house, "Bilbank", at Belfast, where he spends the summer months, painting for an avocation.

James Montgomery Flagg, world-famous artist, is credited with saying, "I wouldn't swap a mile of Maine for all of Europe."

Tourists who visited Maine last summer continue to send voluntary letters in praise of the hospitality and courtesy accorded them by residents of the State. From New York City alone, Maine Publicity Bureau has received more than a score of letters. Among the many expressions found in them are the following:

"The people of Maine seem to cry all they can to help strangers."

"The courtesy of everyone of whom information was asked, officials and others, everywhere in the State, added to the pleasure of our trip."

"The people were pleasant and cordial."

"Maine is an ideal spot. The people are very congenial and considerate and lovely to everyone. The lighthouse keeper at Portland Head Light was especially hospitable. He took us in the lighthouse, explained it all to us, even starting the light to show how the lights really worked. I don't know how many times a day he climbs those stairs, but he was just as kind as if we were the first people he had seen that day."

"I have heard from three of my friends and they speak of beautiful country, climate and good roads as well as genial hospitality and it all goes well. I intend to visit your State next summer."

The Maine Publicity Bureau again desires to call the attention of selectmen, women's clubs, ladies' sewing circles, churches and fraternal orders to the campaign to secure standard markers for the various towns of the State. This is an important work that means much for the future of the State. Let us hear from some more towns.

The preliminary advertising campaign for recreation is well under way and national magazines for March will carry the first advertisements for the State's recreational business.

Maine as a summer playground is attracting the eyes of Europeans. Requests for literature on Maine were received by the Bureau last week from a resident of Nice, France, and from a citizen of Vienna.

NORTH NEWRY

I'd Rather Read Poetr
BY HENRY DAVIS NADIG

JOURNAL PRELUDE

Patterns

How many million million holes
Have the golden years of the sun made To dip the airy capricious and the old clancy
With blue and red shadows
Or patterns richly the lawn
With blue and gold flowers and blue light Sprinkle the turned hollyhocks, the lily-petals of the garden Faint a majestic silent calyxed and ant pump
Of marching splendour across the cool slope
In northern boy prepossessions of quietude
Before the clamour of a gorgeous day

Voices

Bob White's sweet data more richly repaid patient patience
Of fresh tidings across the tawny haze,
The hoarse mutter of a venerable fog
from the pond outside,
Across the handwoven haze of a new sky
The insect airplane crosses—Deep driving humble bee of the upper
And is swiftly gone.

Invitation

Load up your wagons you movers, man Fill up your caravans with richness you seekers, strivers, aspirants,
Get a job of this glory, you getters,
more where it comes from,
Get a rich drop load a day's march on Gleek in a joyful of glory
Sip up a bucket of beauty for another day
—James Douglas

A Pondering Poet

The poet of the

If Lew Saret is the poet of the west, the backwoods and the In. Glenn Ward Dresbach is the poet of Southwest, the desert and the far mountains. It is in his colorful paintings of desert, his enchantment a mesa and his wonder at the mountains that we really get the essence of poet's communication. But Dresbach's most recent volume, "Selected Po-

(Henry Holt & Company), compositions chosen from his former book Wilderness Poems. The poetry including "The Orchard of the Desert," ranges from the lyric of desert and ranch of the Southwest to apple orchards and abnfarms of New England from sea and mountains to poems of sea and sun.

One does not expect in this region. Deane's poetry is very emotional and awing, nor is one conscious of depth of vision. There is a sober passiveness most of the poems, a wonder and a contemplation of the universe, without the poet contemplates, without any spontaneity, in the mountains and canyons, the brooks and deserts. Yet there is a quiet beauty in his delicate descriptions in his careful observations. There is also to be for the poet the fascinat-the sea, when I was a boy. What a story lies in this passion. "The Story of a House!" a drama, what tragedy! Yet I would say that it is not well told; it lacks power; it has not what I call to call (if I may so phrase it) "zip." "ponder" seems to be evidence of a great deal by the poet and might be taken as a key word for his poem. But it certainly is not a bad idea to ponder! Would that some pondered often! I find as I look through the book that I have checked the title "When We Have Pondered" "Canyons," "Approach to Cedars," "Enchanted Mesa," "The Water Falls" which reminds me just a little of Frost (only Frost would have left out last line), "Mountain Sonnets," "Western Mountains" and the introductory sonnet, which I think will quoting.

The Little Ships That Never Sail

At work on inland farms he must have In careless youth, of sailing ships the With lifted ports where still the gleamed
From seas and ports he loved but came,
In him was some old trace of blood
The lift of sails and thrill of blowing
But land had held him and the harvest
And he had never dared to stray Too old at last for work, his knotted by,
Have turned to dream his youth
And at a window facing prairie lands
He the cloud-ships high in light
Each day he sits there, till the dawn
To build his little ships that never sail

An Invaluable Anthology

No careful student of American can afford to be without a copy of Untermeyer's new critical anthology
"American Poetry—From the Begin-to Whitman's "Native Land" (part of the "Native Land" company). Whether or not one ever agrees with Mr. Uttermyer's essays which preceded the selection of poetry and whether or not one here questions the editor's judgment must be granted to Mr. Uttermyer who holds a leading place among anthologists has given the most extensive and compact presentation of poetry through Walk Whitman's poetry.

The book, some 800 pages, is in a condensation of countless biographical and historical facts, an epitome of the whole basic trend in American literature, a commentary invaluable in its terse and concise manner. More than that, it has enriched the reader's knowledge of the essays which accompany the poems of each author with his own valuable sketches. These sketches shed new the glint of the anthropologist's attitude upon many of the poems and the reputation of others. Lovers of Lou will rejoice at the anthropologist's ap of this poet who in recent years has disparagingly neglected. A very level criticism is made of Edgar Allan About fifteen years ago, the poet, through, but concise appreciation. Whitman. Mr. Utemyer says: Good Gray Poet neither blame nor where it is due and the reader will discover in this illuminating sketch of a very vivid picture of the poet. Mr. Utemyer has devoted about pages to Native Ballads and Folk. This section includes American Poetry, Spanish-Colonial Verse, American Ballads, Negro Spirituals, G. Social, "Ghosts" of the Work, Tercio Melodies, Cowboy Son: Robo Harmonies, Backwoods Ball:

City Gutturals. In these the reader finds many of the old favorite ballads, songs from Old Folks at Home to Jones. A very complete bibliography at index of first lines concludes the volume. What more could the student of American Poetry wish?
